CODE	DESCRIPTION
VT	Unregistered daylilies from George or Chris Darrow.
It July	Bloom season, average time bloom begins at our farm.
re	Cultivars bloom for 4 weeks on the average
6.5 Flwr	Rebloom occurs after a rest of about three weeks
32 Ht	Average flower diameter (in inches).
dip	Height of scape (flowering stem).
tet	Diploids have one set of chromosomes.
	Tetraploids have two sets of chromosomes and are in general larger than dips.
D	Dormant foliage in winter.
SE	Semievergreen foliage.
E	Evergreen year round, less hardy in northern climates.
ext	Extended blooming period of more than 16 hours.
frag	Fragrant flowers, as determined by breeder.
noc	Nocturnal flowers open in the afternoon or evening.
b/s	Average number of buds on scape (flowering stem).

tepals	Are both petals and sepals. A daylily has six tepals.
bicolor	A blossom with sepals one color, petals another.
eye	A wide ring around the top of the throat in another color. Also referred to as an eyezone.
halo	A lighter ring than an eyezone.
picotee	An outline or edging around the rim of the tepals or petals.
recurve	Sepals and/or petals curl back under themselves.
ruffling	Usually occurs around the edges of the petals and sepals.

Flower Terminology

We give you the option of picking the size you want. Size A is bigger, quicker to establish and bloom, and best for quick results. Choose the smaller B size for growing on or mass plantings.

The larger size A will usually bloom the first season after planting. The starter size B is smaller, and will generally bloom in its second season.

Rule of thumb: Most daylilies will bloom on two large fans.

A size 3-5 fans; Blooming size
B size 1-2 fans; Growing size

Ordering From Olallie Daylily Gardens

We have observed that fewer and fewer people are ordering via the postal mail. We still are happy to fill orders that way but are no longer including an order form.

If you would like to mail in an order, just use a blank piece of paper and calculate as described below. Shipping totals are based on a dollar amount and should be easy to figure. If credit card is supplied as payment we can figure it all for you and of course invoice you when we ship.

As one might suspect there are many, many more cultivars available online. And in fact there are many yet undiscovered gems on the farm that only a traveller coming in person can discover.

We are a small nursery and as such have a hard time keeping up with phone calls, give us a call but please be patient, we are probably outside digging!

This mass of daylilies are many of our newer cultivars Including daylilies from Gossard, Derrow, Huben and others. Spiders, Giant eyezones and reblooming reds are some of the attributes we are working on.

Some of our 2015 hybrids selected for introduction. A great selection of colors, forms, and eyezones.

Name A Daylily:

We are offering customers to name a daylily. The process is simple, just contact us about it or check online. The cost is $100.00 for naming and typically $30 for a blooming size plant ("A" size). You will get a certificate and the plant will be officially registered with your name choice. The prefix Olallie will be added and there is restrictions on length and words used. contacts us for more information

Spring 2016

Another season is approaching! It will be an exciting season, with lots of newly propagated cultivars and maturing seedlings. We're working on a new website with a better layout. As always we're working on lots of new hybrids. We're particularly interested daylilies that push the envelope: extra tall, extra earlies and daylilies with unusual characteristics such as dark scapes.

Of course we are growing and propagating many daylilies through out the color spectrum as well.

As always one main focus is hardiness and strong growth. Daylilies grown in Vermont in average garden soil with minimal pampering, it they can grow here imagine how they'll do in your garden with just a bit more attention!

You'll not find many nurseries much less daylily nurseries like Olallie Daylily Gardens. It's a family and community affair. Every year people from around the area come to work here! We're a small local farm that's passionate about the land, plants, flowers and sharing the experience with others! Whether your a customer, employee or just a visitor you'll be treated with kindness, care and consideration. And please if you can take your shoe off and walk barefoot for a bit

Irises

Many Iris species make great complements to daylilies. Their bloomtime is such to augment to early bloom season of daylilies and the blue, purple and white shades are perfect for offsetting the yellows and golds of the daylilies.

Select hardy Perennials add variation to any planting both in texture and form as well as color. We grow hundreds of perennials here on Olallie Farm. In fact many of our daylily beds are full other other perennials as well!

Siberian and Japanese Iris have fine fibrous roots systems which makes them susceptible to drying out. Be sure to not let the roots dry in the sun and keep them moist before and after planting.

iris ensata (Japanese Iris)

Japanese Iris while not as long lived as Siberian Iris are worth growing for a number of reasons. Foremost is their tenness of bloom. Here in Vermont they bloom from Early July into the end of July. The predominate blue and purple coloration make for cool contrasts to July's hot colors. And some of the more exotic color patterns are amazing!

Siberian Iris
 The main reason for growing Siberian Iris, beside the beautiful colors, is their hardiness and longevity which make them perfect complements to Daylilies. Iris siberica grows in most garden soil types with at least a half a day of sun. We have found the Siberians to be tolerant of both extremely wet soils and droughty soils. Performance and increase are best in soils on the wet side. Siberian Iris are resentful of transplanting and as such generally take a whole season of growth before blooming.

Early or First Bloomers

Our early blooming daylilies are as reliable and hardy as bulbs, they guarantee early season color. They can be treated just like a bulb for predictable early bloom. An additional bonus is these earlys can be used to cover the dying foliage of early spring bulbs. In Vermont, the gold and yellow shades of the earlys usually coincide with Siberian Iris complementing the blues and purples beautifully.

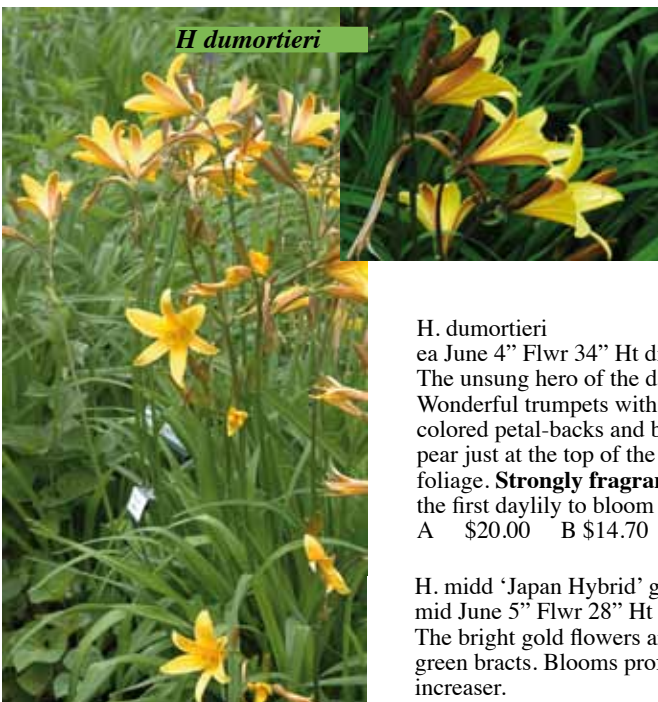

Extra Early Species

These two species are some of the earliest to bloom! Strong growing and with beautiful foliage as well as blooms. The perfect complement to Iris and other early perennials.

Species Daylilies

The Hemerocallis species are often overlooked. Each exhibits wonderful garden characteristics, particularly suited for cottage gardens, wild plantings, collections, and other less formal gardens. As with all daylilies, they provide a hardy long-lived backbone to any garden, yet are understated and so meld well with other plants. They are so different from many of the newer cultivars that they are quite eye catching.

HAPPY RETURNS

Stella & Friends-The Stella D'Oro Story

Stella D'Oro (Jablonski, 1975) is probably the best known daylily in the US. Developed in the early 1970's, Stella was considered a breakthrough in daylily hybridizing because of its continuous bloom. Desirable attributes of moderate size, simple color, and rebloom make it a daylily of choice for many landscape plantings. Additionally, its small stature and excellent performance make it an ideal candidate for container growing. Though Stella was the first of its kind, it is no longer alone.

Olallie Cultivars

There are 59 Olallie cultivars, developed by Dr. George Darrow. Over the twenty years or so in which Dr. Darrow collected and hybridized daylilies, he worked improving on tetraploid daylilies, getting good saturated color and consistent performance. His best work was in the area of late and extra late bloomers. Dr. Darrow's hybridizing program which began in 1957 developed over 50 varieties.

HUGE YELLOW

Citrus

Loved for their simplicity, the sunny hues of citrus coordinate well with virtually all flowers. Ideal for border plantings. Citrus colors stand up to the heat of summer with crisp vibrancy.
